On the Other Side of the Door-David R. Bilderback 2017-03-13 This book represents ten years of writing weekly articles for the local newspapers. It began at a time in my life when I felt pressed by many things, not the least of which was the desire to express the word of God. I have always been taken captive by Holman Hunt's allegorical painting Light of the World, which represents the figure of Jesus preparing to knock on an overgrown and long-unopened door. This is the door of our own heart, which only we can open to Jesus. This book represents my Bible-based thoughts, beliefs and experiences on the other side of that door with Jesus.

Trans(in)fusion-Ranjan Ghosh 2020-10-08 Trans(in)fusion is a highly original book that tries to radicalize our ways of 'critical thinking' across disciplines. The book, refreshingly, brings into play critical philosophy, literary criticism, studies in mathematics, physics, chemistry and developmental biology, and various other disciplines and epistemes to set up a tenure and tenor of 'critical thinking'. The book is an exclusive intervention in how thinking across traditions and systems of thought can generate distinct interpretive experiences. It questions, in a unique transcultural and transversal bind, our ways of hermeneutic and literary-cultural thinking. Trans(in)fusion resets the dialectics between text and theory.

Thermogeology- 2018-05 The science of 'thermogeology' is associated with the study of the storage and transfer of low-enthalpy heat in the relatively shallow geological environment. It is characterized by several analogies with groundwater flow theory; indeed, modern hydrogeology has roots in heat flow theory. Heat conduction is governed by Fourier's Law and is directly analogous to Darcy's (groundwater) Law. Groundwater head, hydraulic conductivity and storage have thermogeological analogues in temperature, thermal conductivity and volumetric heat capacity. Advection of heat with groundwater flow is directly analogous to the advective transport of a reversibly sorbed, retarded contaminant. Geothermal technology relies on the fact that the Earth (beneath the surface) remains at a relatively constant temperature throughout the year, warmer than the air above it during the winter and cooler in the summer, very much like a cave. The geothermal heat pump takes advantage of this by transferring heat stored in the Earth or in ground water into a building during the winter, and transferring it out of the building and back into the ground during the summer. This book covers state-of-the-art understanding of the emerging technology of ground source heating and cooling. Technical and economic development of these technologies are improved exploration and resource/reservoir characterization, lower-cost drilling techniques, reservoir engineering (obtaining the required fluid flow) and more efficient power conversion. Geothermal energy's largest contribution to the world's energy market is through direct use applications such as process heat, thermal desalination and heating and cooling (via adsorption chillers) of buildings. Direct use applications can access low temperature HSA, EGS or convective hydrothermal systems and have the advantage of not needing the very high flow rates or temperatures needed for electricity generation because of the higher efficiencies of direct use applications. Thermogeology will upkeep engineers, geologists, architects, planners and regulators with the fundamental skills needed to manipulate the ground's huge capacity to store, supply and receive heat, and to implement technologies (such as heat pumps) to exploit that capacity for space heating and cooling. They will understand the importance of the technology and wish to obtain fundamental theoretical and practical understanding and design skills.

Crop Residue Management Systems-W. R. Oschwald 2020-01-22 The management of croplands has a large impact on the quantity and quality of food and fiber production and on air and water quality, all of which influence the quality of our environment. Management of the nonharvested plant tissues, such as leaves, stems, branches, and roots that constitute the residues from the production of food and fiber, is one of the farm practices that affects crop production via nutrient availability and cycling. Management of these residues also provides opportunities for control of dust in the air and sediments and nutrients in waters through control of soil erosion caused by wind and water. Thus, the task ahead for the management of croplands for improvements in the overall well-being of people involves the application of known effective crop residue management systems to maintain crop production and to reduce wind and water erosion. There is need, as well, for development of more effective management systems through laboratory and field research.

The Southern Baptist Convention and the Judgment of History-E. Luther Copeland 2002 Without revealing when the original was published, Copeland says he has incorporated subsequent events, and has clarified his argument that taking the wrong side of the slavery issue was not the Convention's only error, but merely its most pernicious. He continues to assert that the position not only contributes to ongoing racism, but also has possible effects on foreign missions, relations with American Baptists, responses to the ecumenical movement, the treatment of women, and attempts to enforce orthodoxy of belief. He was a Baptist missionary. Annotation copyrighted by Book News, Inc., Portland, OR.
